

Against all odds, in a desolate, bare and sandy place, the Gush Katif farmers were determined to make the desert blossom.

Gush Katif agriculture achieved international recognition and was a significant part of Israel's export.

Agriculture

The unique conditions, the challenging reality, and the connection between the farmers and the Rabbis brought about Halachic innovations, and the development of new agricultural methods which stood up to the highest standards – including Halachic ones.

One of the inventions in Gush Katif is the system of growing leafy bug-free vegetables. Even today, no matter where these are grown, this type is known as "Gush Katif vegetables."
