

When Prime Minister Ariel Sharon announced his controversial Disengagement Plan in 2004, it raised many practical and relevant questions about Zionism, Judaism, civil disobedience and national unity.

The “Israeli human chain,” face-to-face, and the orange ribbon all represent the “orange” campaign.

The Public Outcry

Those opposing the Disengagement Plan conducted their campaign in a unique fashion, based on their ethics and world view. This was characterized by activities designed to draw in large portions of the public, and at all costs to prevent a civil war.
